When tired with wandering many a mile, I've welcomed thee with pleasure; And when fatigued with life's rough storm, Thy friendly solace oft would warm, And prove a Poet's treasure. Thy form shall clasp my aching head. When Anguish hovers round my bed, And bids my sorrows slumber: But virtue, must preside within, For sleep avoids the soul, where sin, The conscience doth encumber. I believe it is by one J. M., a few years ago, a correspondent to the Ladies...
