Now, it seems that all this time, as the newspaper boy bustled about his work, he thought very often during the day of a certain little pale face that looked out for so long together upon the moving crowd below. Sometimes he saw him, still just as sad and lonely-looking, drive off in a carriage full of bright ladies; and if he had been asked whom he pitied most in the world, he would have pointed to the high window, and said, the little sickly gentleman up there. One day Johnnie saw the paper-boy examining a small clumsily-carved boat with great attention, and from that moment was seized with a great desire to give him a handsome little ship that he chanced to possess. Do not, however, suppose he would have been so generous had he wanted it himself; but, as I told you, he had plenty of toys. Now it seems that the paper-boy, on his side, had made a scrapbook out of some old illustrated periodicals his master had given him, and he often thought how it would amuse the young gentleman who went out so seldom. One morning, therefore, when he left the newspaper, he ventured to give it to the servant; and as the man was good-natured, he took it up to Johnnie, with a very respectful message from the little boy. The result was that the newsboy was taken up into Johnnie s room, who showed him...
